In all cases, 1962 suggested retail list prices have been set realistically to give the dealer an honest reference point for setting actual prices based on his cost of doing business and the services he performs. The suggested list price is that which Keystone believes will be the usual and customary retail price in many trading areas, although prices may vary in different localities. At this price the consumer gets exceptional value for the features offered. The dealer in his own local advertising may use the manufacturer's list price as a reference point for his own price (if his own price is to be lower) when he is satisfied that this price is the usual and customary one for his trading area.
